"Metal Bars in Fixed and Removable Implant Treatment"

By
Dr. Radi Masri

Introduction:

Dental implants are the first choice of treatment for edentulous spaces and are utilized to restore esthetics and function in patients with missing teeth. In many instances, metal bars, supported by dental implants, are used to support a fixed or removable prosthesis. The design, material used, attachments, and extension of these bars differ depending on the clinical situation and should be customized according to patient needs and according to the restorative plan.

The presentation will review different types of implant-supported bars used in both fixed and removable prosthodontics. Case presentations of successful treatments utilizing dental implants using advanced restorative procedures will be shown and discussed in details and recommendations for successful edentulous patient rehabilitation will be presented.

Learning objectives:

- ✓ Understand the physical properties of metals used to fabricate bars
- ✓ Identify ideal clinical situations for using bars in implant treatment and what are the indications for different treatment options
- ✓ Understand the steps involved in fabrication of metal bars including communication with the laboratory
- ✓ Visualize the steps involved in complex rehabilitation of patients with dental implants
